who was at the Academy of Music last Sunday tisements had said that they would be serious as Uncle Tom and Simon Legree, but they were nevertheless expected to be comic. They were neither, and they deserve to have something as painful done to them as what they did to the people who had paid $3,000 to be amused and were not. Actors' selfentisfaction often takes in comedians the form of believing that they can be laughable all by themselves with no help from playwright or manager, and these two men are old offenders of that kind against occasional audiences. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is the current play at the Academy with a fine cast and a pictorial setting. The cottonfield scene with its whipping of Tom by Legree was given for the Actors' Fund. Mr. Daly figured as the cruel overseer. He seemed to have thought that his oddity of guttural drawl and immovable pose, sometimes turned to account in the absurdities of farce, would be sufficient for a travesty of a pathetic episode in the famillar drams of slavery. He, therefore, bored the audience cruelly. Mr. Hopper's offence was not so negative. Indeed, it was torturingly positive. His device of levity was to break up the solemn sentiments of the pious old slave by applauding them, and it was a pitful failure. The people at in wonder and resentment. They dispersed unaware that Mr. Hopper and Mr.
Duly would be arrested on the spot. The knowledge of that fact would have cheered them up a little.

Elita Proctor Otis's appearance as a star with the Donnelly stock company at the Murray Hill is more interesting in its significance than in the fact itself. This is not meant to belittle Miss Otis's performance in "Oliver Twist," but should the experiment of a star visiting a reportory stock company be succeasful it may mean a revolution in these organizations. Neil Burgess has lately been almost alone in the return to a system once customary. Nowadays in Germany and Austria a star hardly ever takes his own company along, but is the so-called of the local organization. Melbourne MacDowell has lately acted in that dou melodramas and not his distinction as an actor that has given him engagements. and "Gismonda," and besides this the husband of the late Fanny Davenport supplied the scenery and costumes, and the stage management gained through long familiarity with the plays.

In the engagement of Miss Otis no causes cutside of her professional value prompted Mr. Donnelly to present her. A version of Cliver Twist" as good as the one she brings could easily be secured. The adapter is not named on the programme, but the version resembles the one made and used for several years by James A. Herne. How that now dost playwright would blush for such a clumsy dramatization in view of his later work. However, it is a familiar fact that a Dickens story in its entirety is impracticable on the stage. Robert Lorraine, the English actor who came over to act in "To Eave and to Hold," has been engaged for leading male roles in Daniel Frohman's stock company next season. Cecilia Loftus, who will return to the organization, will make her farewell appearances in vaudeville this summer, using such large cities as Baltimore and Pitteburg as "one-night stands." She will do her initiations and act in "Undine" in Showing the Great Growth in the Estimation in Which the Artist's Works Are Held.

There was much felicitation among the Monet admirers yesterday upon the news from Paris that at an auction sale at the Hotel Drouot 80,000 francs had been paid on Monday for one of Monet's paintings, a picture of Saardam. Holland. All admirers of May Robson will sail for Europe for a vacation on May 18. Henrietta Crosman is considering a play by George C. Hazleton, Jr. who wrote "Mistress Nell," and Minnie Seligman is giving her attention to one by Carroll Fleming. Adine Adler retired from "Ben-Hur" on Saturday to marry Moses Victorson, a Boston merchant. Mabelle Gilman, whose illness forced her to relinquish the title part in "The Prima Donna," will appear in "The Roll of the Drum" this summer if she is well enough. Rashel Sterling has been advanced to an important part in "Lovers' Lane," and Ethel Strickland has taken her place in a small rôle.

Pierre Berton, who wrote half of "Zaza," and of "The Royal Necklace," which Mrs. Langtry will produce in London, used to be an actor. He acted Scarpia in "La Tosca, and Ipanoff in "Fedora," in the original Sarah Bernhardt productions. Edward J. Morgan and Theodore Roberts have been engaged for the Frawley stock commany this summer. Frederic Rankin has bought the dramatic rights of "The Japanese Nightingale," to a story now run ing in a monthly magazine, and soon to be published by Hricers'. It was written by Onoto Watanna, whose real name is Winifred Eaton and whose parents were an English naval officer and a Japanese gelsha girl. Mr. Rankin will make the gelsha girl. Mr. Rankin will make the grant gra In response to his beckonings they followed within a comparatively short time some canvas of Monet's has changed hands at a figure equal to or perhaps exceeding that of Monday. There is at least one painting by him in this city which cost its owner $5,000. But so far as those who followhis fortunes could recall yesterday, at no publicsale has a work of Monet's brought as much as 30,000 francs. Here in New York the pictures of the Rouen cathedral series—which is considered by the artist himself to represent the finest of his work—have sold at auction for approximately $3,000 or $3,100 each. While Monet holds this opinion about these works, among many of his most earnest admirers there is an emphatic opinion, which is backed up by their pocketbooks, that he has done pictures of another character that are finer. The price paid for the Saardam canvas, augmented by the auctioneer's percentage, which in France is added to the price of a picture purchased at an auction, and by the 15 percent, duty of the United States tariff, would represent a price for the painting in this country of well above $7,000.

It made some of the Monet worshippers look all the more fondly on their possessions. Another man whom many acquaintances look upon as preoccupied with the practicalities of business life, found himself in a drear house when his family went out of town leaving him here, the house having been stripped of most of its furnishings and turned over to the hands of the decorators. He stood it as long as he could and then went straightway to a friend biessed in the possession of several Monets and declared that his friend simply must send up a Monet or two to him, that he might in his loneliness preserve the poise of his intellect and satisfy his asthetic longings.

It became once more Durand-Ruel's property for 5,800 francs, and was resold for 6,000 francs to M. de Cap, at whose sale on Monday it brought 30,000 francs. It is in a vastly different style from Monet's later work. In view of the changes in Monet's method of painting as the years have gone by and he has attained to greater power, it is interesting to note that he says: "If I live and my eves hold out, I shall some time paint so that the spectator will not be conscious that he is looking at paint."
